

"I had hoped that in our country we had moved beyond the point where race wasn't a factor but we simply have not, as this book clearly illustrates."

Progress?

How far has America come on the issue of racial equality? Have we patted ourselves on the back prematurely, in the wake of the Civil Rights era, and failed to acknowledge the racism that still exists in our midst? Authors Herman Malone and Robert Schwab suggest as much in their narrative of corporate discrimination and legal injustice. In their riveting firsthand account, you will learn:

- How a Fortune 500 giant systematically canceled contracts with African-American suppliers
- How the National Black Chamber of Commerce fought back with lawsuits and public pressure
- How Herman Malone, the President and CEO of RMES Communications and recipient of the Martin Luther King, Jr. Social Responsibility Award, staked everything he had achieved as a business and community leader in a courageous stand against institutional racism
- How Malone refused to be beaten by the system and flourished even in the face of adversity

This powerful book—which provides a unique true account of the status of African Americans in courts and boardrooms—calls attention to the failure of the nation's justice system to engage and correct the "economic lynching" African Americans have suffered at the hands of corporate empires. It holds the system accountable and demands positive changes that will make economic parity a reality.
